

Airbag
Wren Cellier

texte d'Ana Jikia

du 06.06 au 27.06.2025

★☆☆° ★°✿+° - \ , ✿.....★°✿+°

THE SECRET LIFE★ SWIM IN STRANGE WATER are you connected?

★

★

The ceiling is moving, and my thoughts move with it.
I think of the slow collapse of things: systems, certainties, the idea of "us." I cannot sleep. I am imagining descent, demolition, disappearance, passing, and ending. What is left when everything fades? My head is ticking like a heavy wooden clock. I do not even call this suffering... Something pulls me and won't let me fall into the dark depths of my bed. It is like being in water. No breath or movement, just this uncanny stillness that wants me. I point at the ceiling and then cover my face with my palms. I repeat this movement a few times and feel relief. Now I know my life and your life are a circle, never-ending-not in death, anyway.
I see you for who you are and cannot emerge from here for myself.

I see a formation, something held in the air. A floating hint.
Forever emerging and imploding. They become parachutes, spaces within space, remnants, angel-skins, shapes that catch air as you pass. Can I peek into your head? And into the embroidered slit that appears like a shadow of the night? I remember how I love to imagine an escape for myself... Then I drift to thinking about the emptiness inside this full and blown object. I also suddenly remember hearing an anecdote-how a lot of us daydream about living inside instruments like a guitar or a violin. We dream about a cozy escape, a warm shelter from this hell of a place. The structure in front of me looks like a place I could dream to escape. I feel ready for its emptiness and air; I think to myself I'd be fulfilled and warm inside there.

I overwhelm myself with thinking; I can't help it. I wish the spinning would stop, but instead it accelerates. White curls have my full attention, freshly unraveled, adorning me...
Maybe here we have a longing not for another place, but for another way of holding this one.

[illegible]

Mae West

Airbag, 2025

coton, lin, laine, métal, corail

300x300x255 cm

our bloody, still-damp hearts dribble on the gurneys in cryogenically frozen droplets, 2024

verre, colle, métal, ruban

18x32cm

Mae West bénéficie du soutien de:

